Police Sector Accounting and other issues
Brexit: What happens next and what does it mean for you?

The people of the UK have made a decision to leave the EU. What happens next - and the implications for businesses and organisations in the UK - is less clear.

We have produced an analysis of what we know about the mechanics of leaving the EU, our assessment of some of the external factors that may affect organisations over the coming months and years, and a summary of the different models for trading relationships outside the EU. (http://www.grantthornton.co.uk/insights/brexit--a-public-sector-perspective)

In thinking about the impact organisations will want to consider not only legal and regulatory changes but also market reactions, consumer and business behaviours, and the wider political and economic environment. The Police and Crime Commissioner and Chief Constable will have a role in both shaping its own response and in helping organisations respond to a changing environment. We can expect three broad phases of reaction to Brexit:

• initial volatility
• medium term uncertainty and instability
• longer term transition

The impact of this will be different for every organisation. In looking at the threats and opportunities these phases create, and planning how the Police and Crime Commissioner and Chief Constable can create and protect value, you may wish to consider the short, medium and long term implications for issues like people and talent, strategic ambitions, financing, risk, operations and protecting investment.

We believe that in the coming weeks and months, dynamic organisations have a critical role to play in helping to shape the future of Britain. Grant Thornton is leading a campaign which explores how we can build a vibrant economy. You can find out more here: http://vibranteconomy.co.uk/

We would welcome views on what the priorities should be for government and the UK to create a new economy outside the EU.
Government introduces Policing and Crime Bill

The Home Office has introduced new legislation which will aim to finish the job of police reform. The purpose of the Policing and Crime Bill is to enhance the democratic accountability of police forces, and fire and rescue services, improve the efficiency and effectiveness of emergency services through closer collaboration and build public confidence in policing. It will strengthen the protections for persons under investigation by, or who come into contact with, the police; ensure that the police and other law enforcement agencies have the powers they need to prevent, detect and investigate crime; and further safeguard children and young people from sexual exploitation.

The main provisions of the Bill will:

• Place a duty on police, fire and ambulance services to collaborate and enable Police and Crime Commissioners (PCCs) to take on responsibility for fire and rescue services, where a local case is made.
• Reform the police disciplinary and complaints systems to ensure that the public have confidence in their ability to hold the police to account, and that police officers will uphold the highest standards of integrity.
• Better enable chief officers to make the most efficient and effective use of their workforce by giving them the flexibility to confer a wider range of powers on police staff and volunteers - whilst for the first time specifying a core list of powers that may only be exercised by warranted police officers - and conferring a power on the Home Secretary to specify police ranks in regulations, thereby affording the flexibility to introduce a flatter rank structure.
• Reform pre-charge bail to put a stop to people remaining on bail for lengthy periods with no independent judicial scrutiny of its continued necessity.
• Stop children and young people under 18 experiencing a mental health crisis being detained in police custody - and restricting the circumstances when adults can be taken to police stations - by reforming police powers under sections 135 and 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Restricting the use of police cells for those experiencing a mental health crisis

The Home Office will take forward legislation to greatly restrict the circumstances when a police cell can be used. The Government has been clear that police cells are a poor environment for any person experiencing a mental health crisis. They can make service users feel criminalised and exacerbate levels of distress. This is especially true for those under the age of 18 - yet in 2014/15 more than 150 children and young people were detained in police cells.

Changes to the Mental Health Act will be made under the forthcoming Policing and Crime Bill. They include:

• Banning police cells as a “place of safety” for under-18s.
• Creating regulations to limit the circumstances in which police cells can be used as a place of safety for adults.
• Reducing the maximum duration of detention for the purposes of an assessment under the Act from 72 to 24 hours.
• Widening the current definition of a place of safety to increase local capacity and flexibility.
• Extending police officers’ powers to act quickly to detain and remove people experiencing a mental health crisis from any place other than a private dwelling (for which a warrant would still be required).
• Requiring police officers to consult health professionals before detaining someone under the Act’s provisions.
• Clarifying that assessments under the Act can take place in a private dwelling.

A 2014 review of the sections 135 and 136 of the Mental Health Act found people were being detained in police cells because of a lack of available health-based places of safety, whether this was due to capacity issues, staffing levels or opening hours. In May 2015 Home Secretary Theresa May announced up to £15 million of funding to provide health-based alternatives to police cells. Additional provision will be focused on the areas of the country where use of police cells is highest.

The Government has already implemented a range of measures to improve the care people receive and to reduce the burden on police officers, including street triage, liaison and diversion, the Crisis Care Concordat and an alternative place of safety pilot in Sussex for people detained under Sections 135 and 136. These measures have contributed to an almost 50% reduction in the number of times police cells were used as a place of safety in England and Wales between 2011/12 and 2014/15, but progress is highly variable across the country with five police force areas accounting for more than half of all uses of police cells. This change in legislation will put an end once and for all to the practice of using police cells simply because there is no suitable alternative available and ensure that all sufferers of mental health, no matter where they live, are cared for in the proper environment.
Website Relaunch

We have recently launched our new-look website. Our new homepage has been optimised for viewing across mobile devices, reflecting the increasing trend for how people choose to access information online. We wanted to make it easier to learn about us and the services we offer.

CFO Insights – driving performance improvement

CFO insights is an online analysis tool that gives those aspiring to improve the financial position of their public sector body, instant access to insight on the financial performance, socio-economic context and service outcomes of a variety of public sector bodies in England, Scotland and Wales.

The tool provides a three-dimensional lens through which to understand income and spend by category, the outcomes for that spend and the socio-economic context within which organisation operates. This enables comparison against others, not only nationally, but in the context of their geographical and statistical neighbours. CFO Insights is an invaluable tool providing focused insight to develop, and the evidence to support, financial decisions.

We are happy to organise a demonstration of the tool if you want to know more.
Power check: Reviewing the effectiveness of police accountability.

Frontline Consulting and Grant Thornton conducted a first term review of police and crime panels, looking at their effectiveness and the strength of their relationships with their Police and Crime Commissioners.

Our report shares the lessons from the first term to help panel members and PCCs build arrangements to continue to improve the effectiveness of police accountability in this new term.

Key findings from our report are:

• Panels and PCCs did not agree on the main barriers to effectiveness. 93% of panels cited limited powers as the top barrier to their effectiveness, while only 37% of PCCs rated it as important.

• Panel effectiveness and influence may be increased by greater public interest in the panel’s work. Panels should ensure their work resonates with the public by selecting the right topics, responding swiftly to issues affecting the PCC and ensuring their challenge and support is insightful and adds value.

• Only around half of PCCs and panels felt panels got the right balance between challenge and support. PCCs considered panels were more effective in their support than their challenge. Only 42% of panel members viewed their proactive scrutiny work as being very or extremely successful.

• 61% of PCCs said that recommendations or observations from PCPs sometimes influenced or changed their decision-making, with only 18% saying their decision-making was always or mostly influenced by the panel’s work.

The report includes a series of recommendations to help strengthen the effectiveness of policing accountability.
Advancing closure: the benefits to local authorities

With new regulation bringing forward the required publishing date for accounts local authorities must consider the areas needed to accelerate financial reporting.

In February 2015, regulations were laid before parliament confirming proposals to bring forward the date by which local authority accounts (including Police Bodies) must be published in England. From 2017-18, authorities will need to publish their audited financial statements by 31 July, with Wales seeking to follow a similar approach over the next few years.

Many local government and police bodies are already experiencing the benefits of advancing their financial reporting processes and preparing their accounts early, including:

• raising the profile of the finance function within the organisation and transforming its role from a back office function to a key enabler of change and improvement across the organisation;
• high quality financial statements as a result of improved quality assurance arrangements;
• greater certainty over in-year monitoring arrangements and financial outturn position for the year, supporting members to make more informed financial decisions for the future;
• improved financial controls and accounting systems, resulting from more efficient and refined financial processes; and
• allowing finance officers more time to focus on forward looking medium term financial planning and transformational projects, to address future financial challenges.

While there is no standard set of actions to achieve faster close there are a number of consistent key factors across the organisations successfully delivering accelerated closedown of their accounts, which our report explores in further details:

• Enabling sustainable change requires committed leadership underpinned by a culture for success
• Efficient and effective systems and processes are essential
• Auditors and other external parties need to be on board and kept informed throughout
